Journeying with cancer: A trilogy

C SATHYAMALA

An ode to my rogue (cancer) cells

*First there was one and then two and before I knew there were one too many counting made little sense morphing new with exuberance new is not progress, not always, I found how can I complain, when, birthed from my own.
They too are mine.*

It is all a game

*a smile,
the littlest of smiles
not untouched with malice
she does not know, not yet anyway, hidden deep within
in her folds
where shall I strike?
it's all a game
I feed, I grow,
does she know?
off her breast
that never fed
a hunger
rogue, she calls me, pinches my cheeks
somewhat melancholic...
The only question left How then shall we cohabit?*

Goodbye forever

*It's time to say goodbye
You arrived
Unannounced
Turned my life
Upside down
Frightened me
To (almost) death
To learn Unwelcome guests, at times,
do bring welcome gifts Cutting edge cuts both ways
Now poetry flows
From my nuked/chemo-ed brain
Thank you very much
But its goodbye time
Do me a favour Stay away, don't return
I can live (only)
Without you*
